

6th Grade

Alex Peppes-

As I commented on his report card, I don't even care about a SS average for the marking period (even though it was awesome). This young man is a great kid, a supportive friend, and a grade-level leader. This was never more evident than the consistent assistance he has lent to a new student who is new to the country and is still learning the English language. None of the 6th grade teachers have ever asked him to help the new student. He puts his own needs aside until his friend understands what is expected and the work has been translated. Only then does he buckle down and get his own high quality work done. This is an uncommon trait for a 6th grader, but one that has been noticed and appreciated. Alex Peppes is a kid others should want to be like bc he always DTRT.

Anja Lubbe-

Sometimes the best things are right in front of us. To start a school year, certain students stand out for various reasons: sometimes they are just more vocal and sometimes it's for negative reasons. Other students, however, take a bit longer to get on a teacher's radar, which is not a bad thing at all. There is not one thing that this 6th grader has done to deserve a DTRT award; it's everything this student does that makes her deserve it. HW is always done with tremendous pride, and every answer has depth and purpose. She is always ready to roll as soon as class begins, and directions never have to be repeated for her. She is quiet, but others should hear her example loud and clear. This is an exceptional kid who the teachers have appreciated b/c she always DTRT.